JUDGMENT

AMIN-UD-DIN KHAN, CJ.- Through the instant review petitions, the petitioners seek reconsideration of the judgment dated 28.12.2021, passed by the Supreme Court of Pakistan, whereby leave to appeal was refused in a batch of petitions arising out of judgments of the High Court of Sindh concerning the constitutional validity of the Income Support Levy Act, 2013 (hereinafter referred to as "the Act"). By the judgment under review, the Supreme Court upheld the conclusion that the Act, having been enacted through the Finance Act, 2013, without observance of the legislative procedure prescribed by the Constitution of the Islamic Republic of Pakistan, 1973 "the Constitution", did not acquire the status of a valid law. The connected appeals and petitions involve substantially identical questions of law and are, therefore, being considered through this common judgment.

2. We have heard learned counsel for the parties and examined the judgment under review, together with the connected appeals and petitions, in the light of the grounds urged for reconsideration.

3. At the outset, it is necessary to reiterate that the jurisdiction of review, by its very nature, is limited and exceptional. Its object is to correct an error apparent on the face of the record or a manifest defect which has occasioned a miscarriage of justice. It is neither an extension of appellate jurisdiction nor a mechanism for securing a fresh determination of questions already adjudicated. The power of review cannot be exercised merely because another interpretation of the relevant constitutional or statutory provisions is conceivable, nor can it be invoked to substitute a different judicial opinion for a conclusion consciously reached upon consideration of the applicable law. The distinction between an erroneous decision and an error apparent on the face of the record must, therefore, remain firmly maintained.

4. The principal controversy determined by the Supreme Court concerned the constitutional character of the Income Support Levy introduced through the Finance Act, 2013, and whether the legislation imposing such levy could validly be enacted as a Money Bill within the contemplation of Article 73(2) of “the Constitution”. The Supreme Court examined the relevant provisions of the Act, its declared legislative object, the constitutional definition of taxation under Article 260(1), and the legislative procedure prescribed by Articles 70 and 73 of “the Constitution”. Upon consideration of these provisions, it concluded that the levy, notwithstanding its financial implications, did not fall within the constitutional classification of a Money Bill and that its enactment was consequently required to undergo the ordinary legislative procedure involving both Houses of Parliament.

5. The distinction between a Money Bill and ordinary legislation is substantive and reflects the constitutional allocation of legislative authority between the two Houses of Parliament. Article 73 constitutes a limited exception to the ordinary legislative procedure prescribed under Article 70 and cannot be expanded merely by characterizing a legislative measure as a levy or incorporating it into a Finance Act. The constitutional character of legislation must be determined by reference to its substance, object and legal effect rather than its nomenclature or the legislative instrument through which it is introduced. A contrary construction would permit the exceptional procedure applicable to Money Bills to be employed for legislation falling outside its constitutionally prescribed limits, thereby circumventing the legislative role assigned to the Senate.

6. The constitutionally mandated participation of both Houses in the legislative process constitutes a substantive safeguard rather than a mere procedural formality. The Senate, being the representative institution of the federating units, cannot be excluded from legislation which does not fall within the restricted ambit of Money Bills. The judgment under review correctly distinguished the recommendatory role of the Senate under Article 73(1) from its legislative authority under Article 70 of “the Constitution”. The constitutional infirmity identified in the enactment of the Act was, therefore, not treated as an inconsequential procedural irregularity but as non-compliance with the mandatory constitutional requirements governing the enactment of legislation. The petitioners have failed to demonstrate that the interpretation adopted in the judgment under review suffers from any patent constitutional error warranting correction in review jurisdiction.

7. The Supreme Court further examined the subsequent repeal of the Act through section 10 of the Finance Act, 2014, which did not expressly preserve the proceedings initiated or liabilities sought to be enforced thereunder. This aspect was considered in conjunction with the more fundamental conclusion concerning the constitutional invalidity of the original enactment. Once the Act was held not to have acquired the status of a valid law, the question of enforcing liabilities purportedly arising thereunder necessarily lost its legal foundation. The repeal and absence of an express saving provision furnished an additional consideration in the judgment but did not displace the primary constitutional basis upon which the controversy was determined. Consequently, the legality of the impugned recovery proceedings could not be sustained independently of the validity of the enactment authorizing them.

8. Examined against the foregoing constitutional and statutory framework, the judgment under review discloses a conscious and reasoned determination of the material questions arising for adjudication. The relevant constitutional provisions, the competing interpretations concerning the character of the levy, and the legislative procedure prescribed for its enactment were duly considered before the conclusion was reached. The reasoning may be susceptible to disagreement; however, disagreement with a judicial interpretation cannot, by itself, constitute an error apparent on the face of the record. The jurisdiction of review cannot be invoked to reopen a concluded constitutional determination merely upon the assertion that the provisions in question admit of another possible construction. To permit such a course would effectively transform review proceedings into a further appellate exercise and defeat the principle of finality attaching to judicial decisions.

9. The petitioners have not demonstrated any patent misreading or non-reading of the relevant constitutional provisions, omission of a material issue going to the root of the controversy, or any other fundamental defect of such magnitude as would justify reopening the judgment within the permissible parameters of review. The submissions advanced substantially seek reconsideration of questions which have already received judicial examination and determination. Such an exercise falls outside the recognized scope of review jurisdiction. The finality of judicial pronouncements assumes particular significance where questions of constitutional interpretation have been determined after consideration of the relevant legislative framework. Although the power of review exists to prevent manifest injustice, its exercise must remain confined to legally recognized grounds and cannot be employed merely to secure a different conclusion upon the same material.

10. It is equally important to emphasize that judicial certainty and the orderly administration of justice require that concluded controversies should not be reopened in the absence of a demonstrable error satisfying the established threshold for review. The jurisdiction is corrective rather than substitutive and cannot be enlarged by reference to subsequent proceedings involving similar questions of law. A judicial determination, otherwise validly rendered by a competent Bench, continues to retain its legal effect unless modified, recalled or set aside through a procedure recognized by law. The mere pendency of connected proceedings or the subsequent grant of leave in another matter does not, without more, furnish an independent ground for reconsideration of an earlier judgment.

11. In view of the foregoing discussion, we are satisfied that the judgment under review does not suffer from any error apparent on the face of the record or other fundamental defect warranting interference in review jurisdiction. The constitutional questions raised therein were duly examined and determined, and no sufficient legal ground has been established for their reconsideration. Consequently, the instant review petitions are dismissed, and the judgment dated 28.12.2021 shall remain undisturbed. The connected civil appeals and civil petitions, being founded upon substantially the same constitutional controversy, are also dismissed in accordance with the foregoing determination, except C.P.L.A. 863-L/2023, which is adjourned to a date in office, as Ms. Asma Hamid, appearing on behalf of Mr. Muhammad Yahya Johar, ASC, has stated that this case is not identical to the other cases in this bunch, as a different point of law is involved. There shall be no order as to costs.

12. Before parting with this judgment, we deem it appropriate to advert to an aspect of institutional significance concerning judicial discipline and consistency of judicial pronouncements. The constitutional validity of the Income Support Levy Act, 2013, had already been examined by a learned two-member Bench of the Supreme Court of Pakistan in Commissioner Inland Revenue v. Muhammad Mustafa Gigi and others (PLD 2022 SC 420), wherein leave to appeal was refused vide order dated 28.12.2021. Notwithstanding the said determination and the pendency of review petitions thereagainst, a subsequent three-member Bench, vide order dated 21.06.2022 in Civil Petition No.1718-K of 2021, granted leave on substantially identical constitutional questions and expressly contemplated reconsideration of the earlier determination. The course adopted in the subsequent order, authored by Mr. Justice Munib Akhtar, raises serious concerns regarding judicial discipline, legal norms and institutional propriety, particularly when the earlier determination remained operative and was already the subject of review proceedings. It is a settled principle that coordinate or subsequent Benches must accord due regard to earlier judicial determinations, and any departure therefrom must conform to the established principles governing judicial precedent and the prescribed institutional procedure. Although refusal of leave does not invariably preclude consideration of a distinct petition, a subsequent grant of leave cannot, by itself, operate to review, modify or displace an earlier determination. Judicial independence must be exercised consistently with judicial discipline, restraint and institutional decorum. The course adopted in the subsequent proceedings, insofar as it contemplated reconsideration of the earlier judgment without recourse to the appropriate judicial mechanism, was inconsistent with these requirements. We reiterate that adherence to judicial discipline is indispensable to maintaining certainty, consistency and the institutional integrity of judicial adjudication.
